The feature is a part of an Adobe Camera RAW update that was released last week. A new "Automatic Record" option in the Manual mode of the app also lets you shoot more movies and photo sequences. While it is recommended to use this new feature in a dark environment, its advantage is that you don't have to remember anything. To start a capture, click the action button - and you'll get an autofocus and a preview of the movie before recording - at all times. The start of the recording can be delayed during playback, too. The capture is done smoothly without the playback interruption. If needed, you can speed up the recording, slow it down or stop it completely. In the scanner application, the recording is available both in RAW and JPEG. And the RAW files come with a higher quality in terms of tones (see the video on the left). For use in post processing, you can easily select the frames you want, and they will be automatically adjusted by the RAW editor.
